36 STATES NOW IN "WET" RANKS CAST PROHIBITION

Utah, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Are Last Three Commonwealths Clearly Going "Wet" — Carolinas "Dry" Surprise Of All

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—(AP)—In the United States, has turned away from national prohibition as a solution of the age-old liquor problem, and within 24 or 25 days that question will be back with the states.

With an irrevocable impact of ballot, yesterday's elections again showed that the hope and confidence with which the eight amendment was put into force almost 14 years ago was shattered by events of the passing years to something far different.

Although the unanimous decision of states favoring ratification of repeal was broken by the opposition of North and South Carolina, margins in the

TERRIBLE BURDEN OF WAR'S DEBTS STEELING WORLD

Viscount Snowden Discusses Problem as to Whether World is Bankrupt

The terrible burden of war debts, rendered impossible to pay while nations erect trade barriers against each other, in the history of the British Parliament, there has been no figure more heroic in its physical aspect than Philip Snowden. The story of his life is a romance of self-sacrifice. To the young man of Yorkshire he had a wife and a child. In a moment his modest career collapsed in ruin. He was carried to his bed, a cripple for life. All was lost, save the will to live and the will to recover that will, Snowden set about it.

His mind was still his own, and his body was still his own. For two years he read up socialism, economics, politics and the great literature of human revolt against wrong. It was a graduation more exacting than any academic course of study. He was his own professor, and his degree was his own. With the will mending the mind, the mind asserted again its mastery over the body.

A miracle of emancipation from accident, from disaster, from adversity, even if he be hindered by his calamity.

Senate Members and Board of Governors Seek Expression of Higher Court

The judgment against the University of Alberta granting damages totaling $2,500 in the Charles Armand Fowler, having case will be appealed. University officials and members of the senate and board of governors have decided to appeal on the grounds that the costs awarded were excessive and also because they desire to get the decision of a higher court in the event of responsibility of a state university in a case of this kind.

The appeal will probably be taken direct to the Supreme Court of Canada at Ottawa, K. B. Woods, K.C., who is acting in the matter being instructed to appear in the Alberta Court of Appeal at the earliest opportunity for leave to carry out the case. In the Supreme Court of Canada. The application will probably be made next week, and it is not anticipated that it will be refused.

"After very careful deliberation the Board of Governors of the University of Alberta, after consideration to the judgment of the court in the Fowler case at their meeting yesterday, after full consideration of the matter the board decided to appeal the judgment."

It was amplified somewhat by a further statement issued later in the morning by Hon. J. E. Dismore, K.C., the statement from the premier's office was as follows: "After very careful deliberation the Board of Governors of the University of Alberta, after consideration to the judgment of the court in the Fowler case at their meeting yesterday, after full consideration of the matter the board decided to appeal the judgment."

RAILWAY WAGE EDICT REACHED

MONTREAL, Nov. 8.—The conciliation board mediating in the wage dispute between the Canadian Pacific railway and its clerks and freight handlers reached an unanimous decision today. Lynn H. Spence, chairman, said the nature of the decision would not be made public until the board's report had been delivered to Hon. W. A. Gordon, Minister of Labor.

The board was appointed when the company applied for approval of the 20-per-cent cut in wage rate. A similar dispute between the union and the company was recently settled by a 15-per-cent compromise in lieu of the 20-per-cent cut which had been in effect among those employees since May.

THE DUTY OF THE DAY

Election day is the one day in the year when the voter has a chance to take a hand in the government of his country. He can then, and then only, register his approval or disapproval of the policy and administration of the year gone by, and can set the mark for the year to come. It is the duty of the voter to direct the course of events in the year to come. At other times he is little more than an interested onlooker, whose interest is sharpened but not made effective by the knowledge that he must put the bills.

There should be a full turnout of Edmonton voters today, for several reasons. The voters owe it to themselves. They owe it to the council of the past year, whose record is under judgment. They owe it to the council to be elected, whose members have not been made effective by a plurality large enough to assure them that they represent the opinions of the citizens at large and not those of only a small and perhaps sectionally interested minority.

The voter certainly cannot complain that he is unduly limited in choice. Rather he may be confused by the abundance of "riches" in the matter of alternative candidates. The more so because there is not a definite outline to these riches, which are state or group can claim election. In such circumstances the voter's preference is necessarily made largely on personal grounds, and the voter who chooses voters the more nearly the new council will be supposed to represent the judgment of the citizens as to individual fitness of the candidates by reason of ability, experience and record.

For whoever he prefers to vote, the qualified elector should vote at all possible get to the polls and vote.

THE END OF THE ROAD

The theory upon which governments in Canada, municipal, provincial and federal, finance the construction of public works is interesting. The way the theory works out is still more interesting, and for reasons which are extremely practical.

A Canadian municipality wants to undertake some big job, such as the installation of a waterworks system, to cost a half million dollars. Bonds are floated for that amount, bringing interest at four or five per cent, and for all years they will bring. In other words the money is borrowed. A sinking fund is created to meet the annual interest charges on a portion of the principal. At the end of twenty years the bonds are paid off and the debt is cancelled.

But the community is not out of debt. Far from it. It is farther in debt, on the average, than it was twenty years before. Because in the meantime the town has issued more bonds and borrowed more money, faster than it retired the waterworks bonds or provided for them.

The provincial government and the Dominion Government do their financing in the same way, and with the same result. The Bureau of Statistics has published some figures which show what has happened. Thus in 1919 Canadian municipalities had bonded indebtedness amounting to $785,550,896. At the end of the year the bonded indebtedness amounted to $1,311,196,000. In the twelve years they had come up to doubling their debt load—and doubling their interest obligations.

The provinces, the same authority finds, in 1916 had bonded debts and treasury bills outstanding to a total of $220,875,797. In 1930 their bonded debts and treasury bills outstanding stood at the figure of $960,921,230. In fourteen years the provinces had multiplied their debts four and a half times over.

The Dominion Government in 1921 had a bonded debt of $441,000,000. At the end of 1932 the figure was $2,022,782,737. Despite the historic debt-paying policy of Hon. James Robb, the federal debt had gone up $1,581,782,737 in eleven years, a period, a period beginning three years after the war ended.

Meantime of course municipalities, provinces and the Dominion had been paying off bond issues and paying interest on them. But, the point is, over these representative periods of time the municipal-ties, the provinces and the Dominion were all farther in debt than when they survey periods began.

The interest alone on municipal, provincial and Dominion debts now amounts, it is said, to about $1,000,000 per day for every dollar of the debt. That is more than the wheat crop of the West is worth. And—the point to keep in mind—our interest-bearing debt never grows smaller, but always larger, like a snow-ball rolling down hill. Another ten years of it would make our interest bill $2,000,000 per day instead of $1,000,000.

One thing seems clear enough. However it is to be done, some means will have to be found to liquidate this gigantic and growing debt, by changing it from an interest-bearing debt to a non-interest-bearing one. Otherwise the next three generations of Canadians will have to deny themselves public improvements of any sort on any large scale, municipal, provincial and national, and spend their time working off the debt load with which we have saddled ourselves and them.

Does anybody imagine the next three generations of Canadians will or would do anything of the kind?

NO PARTING THERE

France will place an embargo on gold if the United States buys or tries to buy "uncomfortably large" amounts of French gold. It has to be that or abandonment of the gold standard. If the gold moves out, the standard will go with it. The French have a sense of humor. That country could be the Government of Canada, and proudly as being on a gold basis when the world knew it was not.

France prefers an embargo to abandonment of the gold standard, because it is worrying more about the war that is past. It could buy United States dollars now at the rate of 100 francs to the dollar, but that would mean parting with the gold that France holds as a first line of economic defence in case of future wars.

The Passing Show

By J. S. Cooper

This dissertation may prove to be mainly "show," but newspaper "show" is permissible because it affects the public. John Wesley used to say "The world is my parish." Newspaper show has an interest as wide as its circulation boundaries.

On two continents and by two national movements, freedom of press is being fought. In Germany, the Nazi movement has drawn up some restrictive regulations for the German press. In United States, leading publishers are concerned lest the N.A.A. movement bring the whole question of the freedom of the press to the forefront once more of the age-old battleground for freedom.

We talk so glibly and with much lack of understanding about the fights our fathers fought for free speech and a free press. It is timely to recall some of the realities. The realities included much very real things as stocks in which editors and publishers were confined, scissors for silencing their tongues and lopping off their ears, tortures and executions.

So recently as the days of valiant Dr. Samuel Johnson, the lexicographer, it was a criminal offence to report the proceedings of parliament. The great scholar in his poverty used to compile his articles and reports of what took place in parliament for the readers of the Gentleman's Magazine, by taking down what he overheard behind a screen in the bookshop from the gossip of the members, and then writing it into speech form. That is the reason why the reports of speeches of the parliamentarians of those days all appear in the rounded periods and balanced sentences of which Johnson was a master.

When Caxton brought his printing press to England in 1476, he had to get a license from Edward IV to operate it. The licensing of printing presses was placed in the hands of the Star Chamber, which was not subject to any kind of law, and from whose decisions there was no appeal.

Nothing could be printed that was not approved by the government. Down through the reigns of Henry VIII, Mary, Edward VI, Elizabeth, and into the reign of King James, newspapers were regarded as dangerous creations. The publisher had to be a great lawyer, ready to face any kind of trial. If anything appeared that gave offence to the crown of the day. Even after the public rose in the 17th century and the Star Chamber was abolished, the Long Parliament enacted a licensing law for newspapers to ensure that nothing appeared that might adversely affect the government.

When brave John Milton wrote his famous essay "Areopagitica" expounding the freedom of the press in which he said: "Give me the liberty to know, to utter and to argue freely, according to conscience, above all sins which men are guilty of, and by which the world is brought into bondage, I hold it to be a worse sin to silence a man who speaks what is true, than to let him speak what is false; and I do think that the power of the press is not free, nor did Milton view so lightly.

When, in the reign of William and Mary in 1694, the licensing act expired, so great was the impetus given to freedom that a later historian, Henry Hallam, has said: "The greatest blow for freedom was then struck."

Through angry other means to assert press freedom, the King was forced to give a license to the press, and the doctrine of Scandalum Magnatum under which it was a criminal offence to criticize a nobleman or a member of the court, or Parliament or their acts. But though hundreds of persecutions took place till 1694 were repealed, no English government after 1694 ever claimed or practiced the right of licensing the press.

Hiller, in his note to the German press, does not claim the right to license the newspapers. He achieves the result in a more pious way. The new German National Press law makes it a crime for anyone to practice journalism without a license. The journalist is licensed under the new organization, headed by Dr. Goebbels, the Minister of Propaganda and Information.

The new law covers "all persons who take a share in forming the mental contents of any newspaper or periodical, or in the writing of the word or pictures." To get his license the applicant must prove that neither he nor his wife has any Jewish blood, even to one Jewish grandparent; that he has undergone training in journalism; and "consecrated" to the ideals of the Nazi movement.

Every journalist is now made responsible to the State. The newspaper is now a public utility, and every journalist is now made responsible to the State. The only ground of dismissal is for a reason of which can be ascribed to journalism. The Court whose judges are appointed by Dr. Goebbels. Things which are forbidden by the law to journalists are:

1. Anything that intermingles private good and public good in a manner misleading to private opinion.
2. Matter calculated to weaken the power of the Reich at home or abroad, the community will of the German people, its military spirit or its moral or economic, or that tends to defeat foreign policy sentiment.
3. Matter that unlawfully injures the honor or well-being of persons, which is calculated to wound or draws him into ridicule or contempt.
4. Anything that is unethical on any other ground.

There must be members of Canadian parliament and legislatures who read the Nazi law, and are enacted in their jurisdiction before they become subjects of public discussion. Under the Nazi Press law the most complete censorship is achieved.

Where American writers are concerned in over the discovery that the freedom from libel action they have enjoyed in discussion of government measures, does not extend to the corporation of the Nazi movement. There is a law in the United States which makes it illegal for any incorporated newspaper in that state to print political editorials. In North Dakota a newspaper and its editor were recently held in contempt for having criticized a corrupt judicial decision. Minnesota passed a law to revive the old common law which was upheld by the State courts and disallowed by the federal Supreme Court by the narrow margin of one vote.

When tyrants want to assail public liberties they

RIGHT DIET HELPS OVERCOME TONSIL TROUBLE

In the body are several organs which act as "purification" plants, whose duty it is to screen or filter out wastes. The kidneys and liver belong to this class and are wonderful purifiers, removing from the blood many poisonous waste products. The filters for the lymphatic circulation are the lymphatic glands, which screen out all poisons and impurities found in the lymph. The tonsils belong to the family of lymphatic glands, as does the adenoid tissue, and also the glands of the neck.

You were born with two tonsils, each of which was placed in your throat for the definite purpose of screening out wastes from the lymphatic circulation. You might call the tonsils the guard line, or defense line. Upon them falls the very important work of helping to protect the breathing passages from harmful invaders. A sound, healthy tonsil has an active resistance against bacteria and destruction of it by Frey's operation.

Enlarged tonsils result when the patient lives in such a way as to cause a poisoning of the body; in trying to screen out the extra impurities, the tonsils work harder, and increase the size of the tonsils. They are not always diseased tonsils and are the easiest type of tonsil trouble to correct.

When the poisoning has gone further the tonsils are bathed in so much mucus that they become overworked. They also fail to receive the nourishment which they need. As a result of both factors they often break down. At this stage they work harder, and increase the size of the tonsils. They are not always diseased tonsils and are the easiest type of tonsil trouble to correct.
